Art: Sculpture

College of Arts and Sciences

The field of sculpture has undergone significant changes in concept, materials, and techniques over the last century. Traditional concerns have evolved to include site, language, sound, time, light, and movement, enabling our sculpture students to develop new ideas and approaches with their interactive installations, performance, video, and hybrid forms of art. The Sculpture specialization provides an environment where exploration can take place on many levels. In this program, students can gain expertise in a wide variety of materials as they continue to develop their personal aesthetics.¹
